

WANTED

After being pulled over and receiving his 18th speeding ticket this month, Batman was arrested at 2:49 on February 6th, 2012. It was reported that at the time of the arrest Batman appeared jittery and was slurring his words. The arresting officers, Officer Freeze and Officer Penguin, searched the Bat-mobile and uncovered numerous forms of speed.

It has been less than a month since Batman was brought up on charges of child abuse after a court ordered child protective services investigation into Batman's curious relationship with Robin at which point Robin was taken from Batman's care and placed into an orphanage. This investigation was prompted by several missed appointments with 14-year-old Robin's social worker. Authorities have ruled that the boy wonder was little more than Batman's slave. There is evidence that Batman regularly brought the boy wonder into dangerous situation and put in harms way. Sexual abuse has not been ruled out. Batman had apparently escaped his mandated house arrest prior to this latest crime.

Newly elected District Attorney Harvey Dent commented that as unfortunate as this news is, Batman will serve as the perfect example for Dent's campaign against child abuse.

Batman was being held at the Gotham City Police Department without bail until he escaped on February 8th. He is considered extremely dangerous.
